A diagnostic and commercial capability programme for AbbVie Specialty Care France

Prepared for Simon D. Rohrer, Business Unit Director Specialty Care, AbbVie France

The Situation

You are running two distinct commercial tensions at the same time. Team 1 is the market leader in a therapy area where the patient pool is shrinking by design; your product is a cure. Team 2 has been losing share for over a year to new entrants, despite holding a product with a genuinely differentiated mode of action that the competition cannot match.

Both teams are experienced and motivated. That is not the problem. What is missing is the boldness of trying something different (willingness to experiment), and using tailored customer engagement, rather than repeating strategies that no longer fit the conditions.

You have also identified that there may be a leadership gap that runs parallel to the commercial one. You are not sure if the management strategic vision is travelling to the frontline with enough consistency or conviction. You and the two BUMs, who are disseminating the strategy towards their teams, are not 100% sure what is resonating and implemented in a daily practice at the in-field team.

The stakes are real. Team 2 is responsible for roughly double the business of Team 1. A year of continued share loss in that market, or another year of plateau in Team 1, is not a capability problem you can train your way out of. It requires a different kind of intervention; one that starts with understanding the situation clearly, then builds the architecture for a different commercial future.

What This Engagement Produces

A verified picture of what is actually happening

Not assumptions. Not what you observe from the leadership layer. What your frontline teams believe is holding them back and what they think would be needed to change, by team, by function, in their own words. You make better decisions with better intelligence.

A unit that speaks one commercial language

Your BUMs and Sales Managers lead differently today. After this engagement they lead from a shared framework, with a common definition of what bold behaviour looks like in each of their specific commercial contexts. Your strategic vision reaches the frontline intact.

A roadmap for building entrepreneurial capability

A phased, practical, and AI facilitated plan connecting tailored messaging, accountability, and commercial performance into a direction both teams can get excited about and execute against. Not a set of principles. A plan with experiments, governance, and clear accountability for what happens when something does not work.

Clarity on where you lead and where you let go

A precise view of where your energy as unit leader creates the highest commercial return and what to stop doing. You are not the solution to every problem in both teams. This engagement identifies where you are and where you should not be.

The Programme

The engagement runs across four phases. The investment options below determine which phases are included.

Phase 1: Diagnostic

26 interviews (in French) across both teams. Team 1: 3 sales reps and 3 regional managers. Team 2: 5 sales reps, 2 commercial project managers, 4 regional managers, 3 medical, and 2 market access. Plus 4 in-house managers including you. Our French-speaking team members conduct all frontline interviews. Ben leads all sessions with you and your leadership layer.

The diagnostic surfaces what the teams themselves believe is missing and what they think would be needed to succeed, by team, by function, in their own words. The output is a diagnostic intelligence briefing: a clear, evidence-based picture of where the highest-leverage intervention points are, structured around your four objectives.

Phase 2: Entrepreneurial Roadmap

Working sessions with you and your BUMs to translate diagnostic findings into a structured roadmap. Three connected components:

- Entrepreneurial mindset build. Distinct tracks for each team. Team 1: finding growth when you are already the leader and the market is contracting. Team 2: converting a differentiated product into share recovery against new entrants. Each track defines what bold behaviour looks like, what experiments get run, and how results are reviewed.

- AI and commercial performance integration. Where AI tools are introduced to change how your teams identify opportunities, prepare for customer interactions, and review what is working. Practical and specific to your commercial context.
- Accountability architecture. How new ways gets structured and governed without defaulting to old review rhythms. What you and your BUMs measure, how often, and what happens when an experiment fails. The goal is a framework that makes risk feel deliberate, not reckless.

The roadmap is phased by quarter, built for your two distinct team contexts, and designed to be communicated downward, a direction both teams can understand and get behind, not a plan held at leadership level.

Phase 3: Leadership Alignment and Narrative

Before anything reaches the frontline, the leadership layer needs to be fully aligned. This phase works with you, your BUMs and, where relevant, other members of the leadership team to do three things: pressure-test the roadmap against commercial reality, agree the leadership behaviours that will model the entrepreneurial standard you are asking of your teams, and build a shared narrative that carries the strategic vision downward with consistency and conviction.

The output is a leadership team that speaks the same language, makes decisions from the same framework, and knows precisely how to respond when the frontline tests the boundaries of the new direction.

- Each BUM leaves with a clear personal leadership brief: the three or four specific behaviour shifts that will signal the new direction to their team, and the situations most likely to test them.
 - The shared narrative is stress-tested in the session: not just agreed in the room but rehearsed against the objections and questions the frontline is most likely to raise.
 - Simon leaves with a precise view of where his leadership energy creates the highest return and a short list of what to stop doing.

Phase 4 -- Embedding and Leadership Acceleration

The roadmap exists. Phase 4 makes it stick. This phase moves from design into execution, working directly with the key leaders who will carry the entrepreneurial agenda forward in each team.

A series of 3 one-to-one sessions with your BUMs and selected regional managers (up to 7), conducted in French where needed by French-speaking team members. Each session translates the roadmap into their specific context: what it means for how they lead, what they commit to doing differently, and how they will hold their teams accountable for the experiments they run.

- A closing session with you identifies what has taken root, where the resistance sits, and what you need to do as the unit leader to protect the momentum going forward.
 - Each leader enters their sessions with a specific commercial challenge: the real situation they are facing, and leaves with a concrete commitment to one thing they will do differently in the next 30 days.
 - Sessions are sequential, not parallel, so that learning from early sessions can be fed into later ones. Patterns that emerge across leaders are surfaced to Simon in real time.
 - The closing session with Simon is a structured review against the original diagnostic findings: what has shifted, what has not, and where the unit is most exposed heading into the next planning cycle.

The Value of Getting This Right

Team 2 is responsible for approximately double the commercial volume of Team 1. A further year of share decline in a market where your product is clinically superior is a market problem and capability problem that compounds with time. The cost of leaving it unaddressed is not the investment in this programme. It is the ongoing erosion of a business that could be growing.

Team 1 faces a different but equally urgent challenge. When the patient pool is finite and you have already crossed 50% share, the teams that win are the ones willing to find patients differently. The commercial upside of identifying even a fraction of the remaining addressable patients outweighs the cost of this engagement many times over.

The investment options below should be read against that context.

Investment

Option 3 Full Commercial Transformation

€64,000

You leave this engagement with a unit that thinks and operates differently. The diagnostic has been done, the roadmap is built, the leadership layer is aligned, and the key leaders who carry it forward have been worked with individually. The commercial architecture for a different kind of performance is in place.

- Phase 1 -- Diagnostic intelligence briefing across both teams
- Phase 2 -- Entrepreneurial Roadmap built with you and your leadership layer
- Phase 3 -- Leadership Alignment and Narrative

- Phase 4 -- Embedding and Leadership Acceleration (one-to-one sessions with key leaders)
- Regular strategic advisory sessions with Ben, a dedicated thinking partner to test your assumptions, challenge your reasoning, and sharpen your decisions as the leader driving this change

Option 2 Diagnostic Plus Entrepreneurial Roadmap

€39,000

You leave this engagement with a clear picture of the real situation inside both teams and a structured, quarter-by-quarter roadmap for building the entrepreneurial capability you have described. The leadership layer is aligned around it. The embedding work with key leaders is the natural next step.

- Phase 1 -- Diagnostic intelligence briefing across both teams
- Phase 2 -- Entrepreneurial Roadmap built with you and your leadership layer
- Phase 3 -- Leadership Alignment and Narrative
- Regular strategic advisory sessions with Ben -- a dedicated thinking partner to test your assumptions, challenge your reasoning, and sharpen your decisions as the leader driving this change

Option 1 Diagnostic

€26,500

You leave this engagement with a verified, evidence-based picture of what is holding each team back and what they believe would be needed to change -- in their own words. A clear foundation for every decision that follows.

- Phase 1 -- Diagnostic intelligence briefing across both teams
- Structured around your four stated objectives
- Delivered across both teams by Ben and French-speaking team members
- Six weeks from kick-off

My recommendation is Option 2 as the starting point, with Option 3 if you want the embedding work done within this engagement rather than as a follow-on.

Additional Options

Resilience and Wellbeing Support

Both teams are performing under sustained commercial pressure. Resilience is a skill, not a personality trait, and it is trainable. Each team member receives a dedicated one-to-one session with our specialist coach and leaves with a personalised Wellbeing Action Plan they can use immediately. Focused, practical, and grounded in each person's specific pressures. For teams being asked to find new answers in difficult markets, this is the infrastructure that makes sustained high performance possible. Over 100 sessions delivered across the industry so far.

Media Impact Video

Your teams do exceptional work. Almost nobody outside your immediate stakeholders knows it. Our Head of Story works with you to create a short, professionally produced internal video that communicates the impact and identity of your unit. Human, compelling, and shareable. Professional headshots for every team member, replacing the inconsistent mix currently on LinkedIn and the internal organogram are also available.

Next Step

Review this proposal. If the direction is right, confirm your preferred option and we will initiate contracting. All interviews are conducted in confidence. We have a call booked to discuss.

Investment is based on outcomes, not hours. You are never on the clock, we do whatever the work requires to meet your outcomes within the scope.
